Menu tree

The menu structure is used to provide a user with a set of menu bars and associated menu items.

For better organization, the menu items, which are actions, configurations or process references, can be grouped in folders within the menu tree and moved as desired.

It is also possible to save and use menu tree configurations as templates. Only one menu tree can be created per client, but the user sees in the menu only those elements for whose execution they have an action permission[1]. Several configurations of an action can also be present in the menu, but the user is shown only those for which they have been granted the action permission.

If there are several clients, each client has its own menu tree. For similar menu structures, however, templates can be used and adapted.
